

DANIELLE SWARTZ

As a passionate and dedicated advocate, Danielle is building a practice in all things condo law, from condo development, corporate governance and providing representation to condo corporations in court proceedings and dispute resolution.

Since graduating from law school, Danielle has acquired a strong skill-set in all forms of dispute resolution from litigation, mediations, arbitrations and negotiations. As a litigator, who is committed to effective client advocacy, Danielle is results-driven and attentive to her client's goals and needs.

Danielle discovered her interest in condo law while working in residential real estate where she was exposed to all aspects of condominium transactions, including new build condominium sales, preparing condominium documents and attending closings. Since then, Danielle has built a deeper understanding and appreciation of the challenges posed by condominium living as a resident of her own condo. Danielle continues to be drawn to the diverse issues that span condominium law from human rights, real property, corporate law, occupational health and safety, and employment law.

When she is not working, Danielle enjoys running the hidden trails of Toronto, travelling and discovering the City's newest restaurants.
